Hotel Narain Niwas Palace

Built in the 19th century by General Amar Singh, the first Indian to be commissioned in the British Army, Narain Niwas provides a good example of history amalgamating with modern time. General Amar Singh, Thakur of Kanota and Commander of the Jaipur state forces was also the confidant of the then Maharaja, Sawai Man Singh. He was the grandson of Thakur Zorawar Singh, founder of the Kanota family. Amar Singh's reputation as a soldier, administrator and a sports man is exceeded by his reputation as a diarist. His diary kept in English for 44 years from 1898 to 1942 in 89 folio volumes, 800 pages per volume provides unparalleled ethnographic account of Rajput life in princely India in the late Victorian and Edwardian era. The palace is centrally located in the pink city and is designed in a fanciful version of the Anglo Indian style, popular in the Victorian era. Narain Niwas Palace has all modern amenities. The palace was converted to a hotel in 1978, where guests can enjoy traditional Rajput hospitality. The hotel is surrounded by sprawling landscaped gardens and mango orchards. This heritage hotel came up under the supervision of Thakur Shivmath Singh, Gen. Amar Singh's brother. The palace is named after their father, Thakur Narain Singh who had been chief of police in Jaipur state as well as minister of the state of Alwar.
